growing to the challenge

Natura's garden philosophy has taken root and is thriving across the Algarve

Mention 'garden' to most people and they will immediately think of flower, bush, tree or lawn. Few will imagine 'structure' or 'layout' as the primary or fundamental elements. Of course, a garden wouldn't be a garden without flowers, plants and trees - but then a painting wouldn't be a painting without a canvas and board.

The Natura Garden Centres at Almancil and Porches are a veritable wonderland for the discerning gardener. With a vast choice of indoor and outdoor plants, trees and shrubs, plus invaluable advice on all horticultural matters, Natura are at the forefront in helping you create that 'perfect canvas'.

The recent addition of a cavernous new greenhouse at Natura in Almancil has enabled Jean Claude de France, founder and avid campaigner for the 'Mediterranean Garden' to offer an even wider choice of plants and shrubs.

Jean Claude, founder and creator of Natura Garden and Landscape Designers, with over 20 years' experience, has been instrumental in promoting a more ecological way of landscape design in the Algarve. His passion and enthusiasm for the region's climate and natural beauty is reflected in his many projects and commitment to gardening needs.

Jean Claude has been instrumental not only in using classic indigenous varieties of trees and plants that once flourished in the Algarve, but also successfully introducing other varieties that thrive in this environment. This success has enabled him to expand from the original Natura at Porches to open a second garden centre in Almancil.

His other great passion is the preservation of Portugal's olive trees. The Oliveiralentejo project was established to save these wonderful ancient specimens, which are symbols of peace, wisdom and triumph. With over 6,000 trees having been successfully transplanted, not only to the Algarve but also to France, Spain, Belgium and Holland; plus an incredible 12,000 trees in stock, Jean Claude's crusade has enabled a thriving business to expand and develop otherwise-deprived areas of the Alentejo region.

With over 60 employees and seven languages spoken, Natura is a highly professional gardening enterprise able to cover all aspects of garden design, complete landscaping projects, irrigation, maintenance and horticultural advice, from a private villa to a large residential development.

Natura's commitment to clients is categorically clear: 'Environmentally aware, water consumption sensitive and, above all, aesthetically refined'.
